Qualified Energy Conservation Bonds (QECBs) may be issued by state, local and tribal governments to finance qualified energy conservation projects. Examples of qualified projects include energy efficiency capital expenditures in public buildings, green communities, renewable energy production, various research and development, efficiency and energy reduction measures for mass transit, and energy efficiency education campaigns. ECD provided notice to local jurisdictions of their QECB allocations in June 2012.

Attendees will be provided with background information on QECBs and how they work, examples of QECB projects in other states, and a Q&A session hosted by experts from the UNC Environmental Finance Center and US Department of Energy's Technical Assistance Program.

A confirmation email with webinar information and a call-in number will be sent to you after completion of the registration form.
